

The bank transaction code: BTC

The bank transaction code is a three by four-digit code combination to clearly identify the type of underlying entry or transaction in electronic account documents. The BTC is comparable with the extended product code (EPC) used in SWIFT formats.

The three-level BTCs are designated by ISO and are given the 'Swiss finish' in the SIX Swiss Implementation Guidelines for Cash Management. The BTCs each consist of a domain, a family and a subfamily.

As the highest level, the domain defines the area of business of the underlying transaction (e.g. payments, securities, account management, etc.).

The family – the middle layer – defines the type of payment (or just the security transaction), for example, a counter transaction, transfer or debit, etc.

The subfamily – the lowest level – defines the sub-type of transaction, for example a cash inpayment or cash withdrawal.

Entry type	Domain	Family	Subfamily	Domain code	Family code	Subfamily code
Inpayment at the counter	Payments	Counter transactions	Cash deposit	PMNT	CNTR	CDPT

Additional entry/transaction information (AddtlNtryInf)

An entry or transaction can be assigned very accurately using the BTC combination. However, there are also bank transactions, such as fees or charges for services, which have an identical BTC combination, but differ in some details. One example is the charge for inpayments at the counter of a QR-bill and the charge for enquiries from the QR-bill. Here the booking text in the XML-tag <AddtlNtryInf> of the entry (C level) provides the definitive indication of the transaction sub-type.

Please note: assignment based solely on the booking text (parsing) is not recommended.

Cancellations and corrections

Cancellations and corrections have to be carried out in rare cases. Here the original transaction is cancelled. If the original transaction is carried out again with a different amount, the second entry is called a correction. Corrections have the same BTC combination as the original entry.

However, not all cancelled entries can be identified by the BTC combination. Cancellations can only be clearly identified via the reversal indicator (XML tag <RvslInd>): if this is 'true', it is a cancellation (exception: returns from third-party banks with BTC "PMNT ICDT RRTN" always have the reversal indicator 'true').

The most important BTC combinations

The aim of this document is to list the most important BTCs that occur in cash management reporting (camt.05x) at PostFinance.

The BTCs are generally identical at C level (entry) and D level (transaction). An exception is batch credits and debits * (C level) which are shown in even more detail at the transaction level  (D level, in grey in the list).
