

The right way to pay your starting capital

The capital payment account

Before establishing a public or private limited company, you pay your share capital into a capital payment account. This also applies to subsequent payments and capital increases. It means your capital is kept safely until the entry in the commercial register has been made. We will then pay the amount into your existing or new PostFinance business account.

Features

- Capital payment account for:
  - setting up a company/starting capital (private limited company, limited liability company)
  - ordinary and approved capital increase (private limited company, limited liability company)
  - subsequent payments (private limited company)
- capital payment account and business account from a single source
- Inexpensive service

We support you in taking a few steps

1. You issue PostFinance with a request to open a capital payment account.
2. Your PostFinance advisor helps you to fill out the relevant forms.
3. You will receive your capital payment account number by e-mail and can pay in the capital.
4. The capital contribution confirmation will be sent to you in physical form.
5. You instruct a notary to proceed with the establishment of the company, capital increase or subsequent payment. You inform PostFinance of this by providing a new extract from the commercial register. In the case of capital increases and subsequent payments as well as payments of capital with a premium, a copy of the publicly certified resolution of the General Meeting and/or the Board of Directors, in which the capital payments are shown, must also be sent to PostFinance.
6. Finally, we convert your capital payment account into a business account (if you are a new customer) or transfer the amount to your existing business account (if you are already a PostFinance customer).

The capital payment account is the financial starting point for your company.

Once your company has been established, your capital is transferred into your PostFinance business account.
